ARGUMENTS TO JURY ARE BEGUN

Closing Scenes in Ellison Case Captain Andrew Burt Returns to Holding Back Coyota Scalos to Graphic and Pathetic.

AND VINDICATION.

The closing arguments to the jury in the Clyde H. Ellison murder case were begun yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. It is not expected that District Attorney Dennis C. Elchnor will make the final appeal for legal vindication until Thursday morning. Then will follow the court's instructions to the jury, which will probably consume an hour or more in reading. When the case finally does reach the twelve jurymen it will likely be late Thursday afternoon. Judge O. W. Powers, the special prosecutor in the case, made the opening address yesterday afternoon. He spoke for three hours. He began shortly after court opened at 10 o'clock, and was not through when the noon recess was taken. At 2 o'clock he continued, and argued with the jury until 3 o'clock. At that hour Attorney D. S. Truman began his opening statement for the defense. begun yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. The Closing Arguments.

From that time until 5 o'clock, when From that time until 5 o'clock, when court took its afternoon recess until 10 o'clock this morning, he held the undivided attention of the jurymen. He will conclude his arguments this morning, when he will be followed by Judge William H. King. The latter will probably consume the remainder of the day. On the following—Thursday—morning, District Attorney Eighnor will also the trict Attorney Eichnor will close the

It will then devolve upon Judge Morse to instruct the jury how to arrive at a verdict in accordance with the evidence submitted. Then the case goes to the jury, and from that moment the fate of the defendant rests in their hands.

Judge Powers made one of his characteristic addresses. He spoke with great earnestness; painted his mental pictures with such oratorical clearness that the women of the two families interested in the outcome of the case frequently cried. To the mother of the young man the enormity of the crime was probably never set out so vividly before; the picture overcame her; the possibilities of the satisfaction of the law convulsed her, her sobs shaking her whole body.

With Mrs. A. S. Watson it was the feeling manner in which he spoke of her dead husband that brought the tears to her eyes, and caused her to weep with a feeling that touched the hearts of those who sat around her.

Carefully Analyzed the Evidence.

Carefully Analyzed the Evidence. The eloquence of the judge had its effect upon the spectators and jurors alike; his oratory moved their feelings in more ways than one. Step by step he took up every particle of evidence submitted by the state, and analyzed it by comparing it with the defense submitted by Attorneys King and Truman. He picked out the discrepancies is submitted by Attorneys King and Truman. He picked out the discrepancies. Mr. Burt was about the in more ways than one. Step by step he took up every particle of evidence submitted by the state, and analyzed it by comparing it with the defense submitted by Attorneys King and Truman. He picked out the discrepancies as they appeared to him, dilated upon them and showed to the jury, from the state's point of view, how faulty they were. After disposing with the facts as adduced against the defendant, Judge Powers attacked the insanity and justification plea of the defense. He showed as the case is viewed by the state, that they are so in conflict that there is not the semblance of harmony between them; that the one is fatal to the other, and unable to stand upon both at the same time, the fight of the defense has been futile.

On the question of justification the judge endeavored to show that the young mar let too much time elapse between the realization of the alleged wrong done him and the hour of the shooting to warrant his putting up such a plea. Had the shooting occurred im here. He resigned his position in Manila temporarily, with the option of returning to it within three months if the defense. Mr. Burt was about the stready afternoon Mr. Burt was about his visit and furne plans, but stated that he had returned, probably to stay.

"I think," said he, "that I will remained the state of the power of waiting too long to warrant his putting up such a plea. Had the shooting occurred im here. I cannot tell yet though the fatal error of waiting too long to avenge the honor of his wife.

He appealed to the manhood of the jury: asked them in so many words to change place with the defendant, and see whether they would not have done as he did. He told how Ellison's mind had slowly but surely given way under the awful affliction which had befallen him; how he suffered agonies and tortures until he lost all reason and committed the act.

He argued that the act was not the of a mind bent unon the control of a mind bent unon the control of the c

He argued that the act was not that of a mind bent upon cruel revenge; it was a mind unbalanced by a wrong which was not fancied; the derangement was brought about by facts, cool and deliberately committed by the de-ceased. It was an act of a man who sought vengeance in the biblical way,
